Huniahan Hadiqie dan Masrud Huda
State Islam University Syarif Hidayatullah Jakarta

Abstract

This paper aims to describe the issues of good governance at the local level, especially the study of accountability in the management of village funds at Madura, East Java. With the use of observation and interview methods, the study found that accountability in the context of good governance is weak, especially with the independence in reporting, supervision by BPD, cooperation in planning with BPD and involvement of community participation. The conclusions show that the empowerment of the village government, technical guidance provided by the Central Government and the placement of Local Village Assistance (PLD) are not effective in assisting Local Government in realizing good governance.
